Automation, digitalisation, the post-industrial transition and climate change are creating new social risks which are not adequately supported by established welfare state institutions. In this timely book, Maurizio Ferrera, Joan Miró and Stefano Ronchi propose critical social and institutional policy reform in response to the nation state's inability to maintain a balanced ecosystem between democracy, the market economy, welfare and the rule of law.

'To tackle today's challenges in the context of globalization, the authors argue the role of the European Union should be even more centre-stage, not just technocratically, but also politically, to more actively develop an "Eco-Social Union", complementing the core functions of democracies and welfare states. This elegantly composed book is strongly recommended for scholars, students and policymakers.'

– Caroline de la Porte, Copenhagen Business School, Denmark

'This unique volume not only provides an insightful account of the deep social transformations and policy dilemmas in today's post-industrial economies, it also does what other books don't: it proposes an intellectual framework and reform proposals for bringing progressive policy making forward. A very welcome contribution in challenging times.'

– Amandine Crespy, Université libre de Bruxelles, Belgium
